The consultative loya jirga, convened to scrutinise the Bilateral Security Agreement with the United States, has begun with a draft that was only agreed at the very last minute, confusion over the exact status and proceedings of the gathering and a lacklustre speech by President Karzai. The president made little attempt to really sell the agreement to the 2500 delegates; he mentioned some benefits, criticised the Americans and, with little passion or conviction, said it was up to the jirga to decide whether to support it or not. Kate Clark, Christine Roehrs and Obaid Ali report.

This was a very different speech from the president's barnstorming, nationalistic speech at the 2011 jirga which discussed the US-Afghan Strategic Partnership Agreement; then he was confident, funny and emotional and got delegates to their feet applauding with his portrayal of Americans as lucky to be serving Afghanistan. Today's speech was much more restrained and rather rambling, in the end tailing off without a proper conclusion.

There was no clear endorsement of the agreement. Karzai instead sought to present himself as a neutral party. He warned the delegates to beware of anyone saying he was Karzai's representative and suggesting they do this or that: "My representatives are you, the people in this hall," he said, "the national conscience. Therefore you can make your decision entirely free, but considering the national interest." Throughout, he kept repeating that it was the jirga's decision that counted: if they wanted 10,000 to 15,000 American troops to remain after 2014, for example, they would.

He said the US had wanted to rush the government into agreeing to the BSA, but they had resisted. He had been under pressure (from persons unknown) not to summon the jirga and that he portrayed his relationship with the US as combative:

Between me and the Americans, there is no good trust. I don't trust them. They don't trust me. This has been clear for ten years. I had disputes with them and they launched propaganda against me. The issue was about searching Afghan people's houses, land [he does not elaborate here] and security, et cetera. If you say this agreement should be signed, America should be our ally. If you agree with the document and the parliament approves it, the agreement will be signed when the election is completed and security has been provided.

It was this sentence which got everyone checking their translation, but it seems clear: the agreement, said President Karzai, would only be signed after the presidential elections. These are set for April 2014, but given the probability of a second round, Afghanistan might not have a new leader until the summer. US officials are reported mystified and dismayed by this; the agreement, they say off the record, simply cannot wait until after the elections. After weeks of drama and turn-arounds, the White House will now have to decide how to deal with the latest bombshell from Kabul. Its patience had already been wearing thin.

Contents of the speech

As always when talking about the war, the president placed himself above and beyond the conflict, treating the two sides as somehow equivalent:

Afghans live in insecurity. The houses of Afghans have come under attack. Many people lost their lives, many because of Taleban attacks, many because of foreign attacks in the name of the fight against terrorism. Victims of both kinds of attacks are present here.

This, he said, had made relations with the US very complicated and the conflict very serious:

There were days in the last 10 years when I, as president of Afghanistan, decided to cut ties with them, not to discuss with them anymore. But I refrained from doing so and I decided to compromise with them in the interest of the people, to talk with our martyrs' families, to help them. They could have corrected their performance earlier, but they corrected it only recently, gradually, slowly, slowly.

He complained about the US fighting the war in Afghan villages instead of in the strongholds and places of terrorism (presumably across the border in Pakistan) and implied theirs had been a weak friendship: he had asked for jets and they had sent “bambirak [slow bumbling insect] craft”; he had asked for tanks and they had sent pick ups.

At the same time, he said the head of all the nations present in Afghanistan was the US and all, even some Islamic countries, had said if the US went, they would go. Every country in the region, except Iran, had urged Afghanistan to sign the agreement. Yet his own support to the agreement was unenthusiastic:

We support this agreement, but Americans should respect Afghan lives, Afghan houses. They should be truthful and give huge amounts of money. I am in favour of signing the agreement, but I have my own conditions.

Towards the end of the speech, he said:

We make this agreement so that they gradually withdraw from Afghanistan. The agreement will be for ten years and after that they will totally leave Afghanistan and we are in a transition period and it is in our ability logistically (to provide security)... International forces will not leave us angrily. Then they will go happily, they will support us. We will have the time to build our country. Their presence here [currently] is based on UN decision ... If Afghanistan gives the agreement, they can stay, if Afghan people disagree, they will leave.

Last minute US/Afghan wrangling

The president's speech was on a par with the ill will and see-sawing mood of recent days. On 16 November, Karzai's national security advisor, Rangin Dadfar Spanta, together with the head of the Afghan National Army, General Sher Mohammad Karimi, briefed parliament in support of the agreement (see AAN reporting here). Everything appeared finalised when, suddenly, there was a turn around – queries from Washington-based journalists about the out of the blue demand from Karzai for an explicit ban on American soldiers entering Afghan homes. On Monday night, his spokesman, Emal Faizi, briefed Kabul-based journalists that President Obama would be writing a letter apologizing for past mistakes. “The idea,” he said, according to The New York Times, “was to indeed mention that there were mistakes made in the conduct of military operations in the past, in the conduct of military operations by United States forces in the last decade, and that Afghans have suffered, and that we [the US] understand the pain and therefore we give assurances and make sure those mistakes are not repeated.”

It was next to impossible to imagine the US issuing such an apology and indeed the letter, signed by President Obama the day before the jirga and now published, speaks of US efforts having been redoubled to limit the impact of the conflict on civilians, especially in regard to entering houses. It states how under this agreement US forces will not enter Afghan homes “except under extraordinary circumstances, involving urgent risk to life and limb of US nationals”; Obama also spoke of the many sacrifices made by US servicemen and women. This was not an apologetic letter.

The text of the security agreement

It is now the delegates' job to scrutinize the BSA, the text of which was released this morning (read the English version here or at the end of this document). In 26 articles, the agreement, now officially called the Security and Defence Cooperation Agreement (SDCA), “provides the necessary authorization for the presence and activities of US forces [including the “civilian component”, ie Department of Defence employees] [and].... contractors and US contractor employees in Afghanistan.” (Art 2.6)

Some of the highlights are:

No unilateral military action by US forces

“Unless otherwise mutually agreed, US forces shall not conduct combat operations in Afghanistan.” (Art.2.1). The two parties acknowledged that US military operations to defeat Al Qaida and its affiliates “may be appropriate in the common fight against terrorism.” (Art.3.4), but there will be no “unilateral US military counter-terrorism operations”. Both parties retain the right to self-defence under international law. The US role will mainly be supporting Afghan forces and could include:

Advising, training, equipping, supporting, and sustaining Afghan National Defence and Security Forces (ANDSF), including in field engineering, countering improvised explosive devices and explosive ordinance disposal; establishing and upgrading ANDSF transportation and logistics systems; developing intelligence sharing capabilities; strengthening Afghanistan’s Air Force capabilities; conducting combined military exercises.

US forces “shall not target Afghan civilians, including in their homes” (Art.7.3). This is a strange article as the targeting of civilians is prohibited by the Geneva Conventions.

Bases

US forces will have access to nine bases: Kabul, Bagram, Mazar-e Sharif, Herat, Kandahar, Shorab (Helmand), Gardez, Jalalabad and Shindand. The use may be exclusive or joint, as agreed (Art.17). (Spanta, addressing MPs said US forces would have exclusive use only to Bagram.)

External aggression

Afghanistan had wanted a strong defence agreement, but got exceptionally weak assurances: the US and Afghanistan were “strongly opposed to any aggression by foreign states”, including by “externally based or supported armed groups”, said the agreement and would regard any act or threat with “grave concern” and consult urgently to come up with an “appropriate response” (Art.6).

‘Immunity’

US forces will continue to come under US legal jurisdiction:

Afghanistan, while retaining its sovereignty, recognizes the particular importance of disciplinary control, including judicial and non-judicial measures, by the United States forces authorities over members of the force and of the civilian component. Afghanistan therefore agrees that the United States shall have the exclusive right to exercise jurisdiction over such persons in respect of any criminal or civil offenses committed in the territory of Afghanistan. Afghanistan authorizes the United States to hold trial in such cases, or take other disciplinary action, as appropriate, in the territory of Afghanistan. (Art. 13.1)

Afghanistan will also not turn over any members of US armed forces, including civilian employees of the Department of Defence, into the custody of an international tribunal or any other entity or state without the express consent of the United States” (Art.13.5). Even though the US is not a member of the International Criminal Court, Afghanistan is, which means the court has jurisdiction over anyone suspected of committing war crimes or crimes against humanity on Afghan soil.

Other legal waivers and rights

Most of those given to US forces do not automatically extend to contractors: “Afghanistan maintains the right to exercise jurisdiction over United States contractors and United States contractor employees,” (Art. 13.6), ie they come under Afghan legal jurisdiction. US forces can carry weapons and wear uniforms: contractors may not wear uniforms and can only carry weapons in accordance with Afghan laws (Art.14). They also need to be registered. US forces can enter the country on their ID cards; contractors need visas and passports (Art.15). On tax, there are exemptions for both (Art. 17). US driving licenses are also valid for both (Art.18).

Money

No mention is made of funding except to say that Afghanistan will make a “full contribution” to the Afghan security forces and the US is obliged to “seek funds on a yearly basis to support their training, equipping, advising and sustaining.”

The agreement would run until 2025 when it could be renewed; it can also be terminated by mutual written agreement or by written notice by either side with two years’ notice (Art.26).

No mention is made of night raids or of forces entering Afghan homes. However, the clear ban on unilateral US operations gives the government a veto on any operations; the right to self defence also covers the need in extremis for US forces to enter a home, the example Karzai gave to the jirga was to rescue a kidnapped soldier. It seems Karzai had wanted extra reassurances on this. The background is his feeling that the US deceived him over the memorandums of understanding on night raids (see AAN reporting here) and detentions (see AAN reporting here). Whether Kerry’s letter satisfied him or whether it was the lack of an expected American apology that triggered his rather moody speech to the jirga is not clear. What is certain from looking at the text of the agreement is that he failed to get three of his aims in writing: no ‘immunity’ for US forces, no agreement to defend Afghanistan from external ‘aggression’ and no explicit ban on US forces entering Afghan homes.

The document is, of course, written in hard legal language and will be a challenge for the delegates, not all of whom are literate, to understand. Still, this is now their job.

The jirga deliberates

Information about what would happen in the lead up to the jirga was sparse. The preparation commission, headed by former mujahedin leader and president Hazrat Sebghatullah Mujaddedi and the secretariat headed by the director of the Office of Administrative Affairs, Sediq Mudabir, had not made the agenda public beforehand, nor said how delegates would come to their decisions. It was indeed not even clear whether they would be deciding anything or were just being consulted. (1) The jirga websites, in English, Dari and Pashto, were either vague or under construction.

We now know that there are 2500 delegates chosen from 17 categories of persons, including ulama, lawyers, civil society activists, members of both houses of parliament, governors, provincial council chairmen, “well known women”, tribal elders, businessmen, representatives of Afghan refugees living in Pakistan, Iran and other countries, of Kuchis and the disabled and candidates of the upcoming presidential election. Sadiq Mudabir called them the “true representatives of the Afghan people”. Many of them also had come to the 2011 jirga which had approved of the Strategic Partnership Agreement (SPA) with the United States (see AAN reporting here). Apart from elected officials, they have been chosen by the Karzai-appointed 31 members of the jirga commission and the Karzai-appointed governors. It seems unlikely there would be too many opponents of Karzai in the hall.

After listening to the president’s speech, the delegates were to receive the BSA text in Pashto and Dari and come together in groups of 50 people, with representatives, one jirga facilitator told AAN, of each of the 17 categories in each. Each group was then due to elect a chair and start discussing the draft behind closed doors through the second and third days. One delegate told AAN that the now president of the jirga, Mojaddedi, had briefed them yesterday, Wednesday, and asked them to “mainly focus on the immunity issue for US soldiers”. Advisors of Spanta’s National Security Council are due to tour the groups in case “technical questions” about the document arise.

At four pm on each of the next two days, the chairmen and women of the 50 groups are scheduled to present feedback in the plenary session, also for the benefit of the jirga secretariat and commission. At past jirgas, this process sometimes took up to midnight or one o’clock in the morning, with all 50 chairs allowed to report in detail. Then on Sunday, the 50 chairmen and women will report back to the main meeting.

Decision or advice?

Jirga organisers told AAN that the jirga is a consultative body: “People are not supposed to vote for or against the BSA”, said one. “They are just supposed to give input.” The jirga website phrases it like this: “The loya jirga and its decisions are not supposed to overshadow the authority of parliament.” Yet, Karzai kept saying they had to decide. “You will have to take the decision”, he told delegates, “People outside are waiting for your decision.”

In previous jirgas, the reporting back of the committees on the final day has been televised live. In the last jirga, the mainly hand-picked delegates went along with the president’s desire to endorse the Strategic Partnership Agreement, a desire which had been clearly expressed. But today’s more hesitant speech has, in turn, made the outcome of this jirga more uncertain.

(1) This is a consultative loya jirga, not a constitutional one, so the government was allowed to ‘make up’ its own modus operandi and guest list. A constitutional loya jirga would have consisted of elected officials from the main constitutional bodies only. (Technically however the requirements for a constitutional loya jirga cannot be met, given that there are still no district councils. Read more about the history and set-up of loya jirgas in this recent AAN piece. This quasi-jirga modus makes it more difficult to understand, or predict, the internal works of the event.

The text of the agreement

In the context of this Agreement, the Parties strongly oppose such uses of armed force or threats thereof against the territorial integrity or political independence of Afghanistan, including in this regard provision to armed groups of support, such as sanctuary or arms, by any state or other armed groups. The Parties agree to cooperate to strengthen Afghanistan's defenses against such threats to its territorial integrity, sovereignty or political independence.

2. The United States shall regard with grave concern any external aggression or threat of external aggression against the sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity of Afghanistan, recognizing that such aggression may threaten the Parties' shared interests in Afghanistan's stability and regional and international peace and stability.

3. On a regular basis, the Parties shall consult on potential political, diplomatic, military, and economic measures that could form part of an appropriate response in the event of such external aggression or the threat of external aggression against Afghanistan. Consultations shall seek to develop a list of political, diplomatic, military, and economic measures.

4. In the event of external aggression or the threat of external aggression against Afghanistan, the Parties shall hold consultations on an urgent basis to develop and implement an appropriate response, including, as may be mutually determined, consideration of available political, diplomatic, military, and economic measures on the list developed pursuant to paragraph 3, in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures.

5. The Parties shall develop comprehensive procedures to promote the effective accomplishment of such regular and urgent consultations.

a. Such comprehensive procedures shall recognize consultations involving the participation of the United States Secretary of State and Afghanistan Foreign Minister, the United States Secretary of Defense and Afghanistan Defense Minister, and respective Ambassadors in Kabul and Washington, D.C. as primary channels to initiate urgent consultations in the event of external aggression, or threat of external aggression.

b. Such comprehensive procedures shall not, however, limit or prejudice the Parties' ability to consult each other in other channels or through other mechanisms, as urgency or exigency may require.

6. The Parties agree to direct the United States - Afghanistan Working Group on Defense and Security Cooperation to promote the effective implementation of this Article, including development of such comprehensive procedures, and review on a regular basis the list of measures developed pursuant to paragraph 3.

ARTICLE 7

1. Afghanistan hereby provides access to and use of the agreed facilities and areas, as defined in paragraph 7 of Article 2, solely to implement the purpose and scope of this Agreement, taking into account locations of ANDSF and the local Afghan population. Access to and use of such agreed facilities and areas for other purposes shall be as mutually agreed by the Parties.

2. Under this agreement, Afghanistan hereby authorizes United States forces to exercise all rights and authorities within the agreed facilities and areas that are necessary for their use, operation, defense, or control, including the right to undertake new construction works. United States forces may carry out such construction works with members of the force and the civilian component or by contract.

3. Afghanistan hereby authorizes United States forces to control entry to agreed facilities and areas that have been provided for United States forces' exclusive use, and to coordinate entry with Afghan authorities at joint-use agreed facilities and areas, for the purposes of safety and security. Upon request, the United States shall provide to relevant authorities of Afghanistan access to any agreed facility or area that has been provided for United States forces' exclusive use. The Parties shall establish mutually agreed procedures regarding Afghan authorities' access to any agreed facility or area that has been provided for United States forces' exclusive use. Such procedures and access shall be established with due respect for United States forces operations and security requirements. Acknowledging that United States forces may conduct force protection activities at and in the vicinity of agreed facilities and agreed areas as are necessary, the Parties agree to coordinate and integrate their respective plans for force protection to ensure the safety of United States forces, with full respect for Afghan sovereignty and with full regard for the safety and security of the Afghan people. In furtherance of this objective, United States forces shall not target Afghan civilians, including in their homes, consistent with Afghan law and United States forces' rules of engagement.

6. The United States confirms its commitment to respect relevant Afghan environmental and health and safety laws, regulations, and standards in the execution of its policies. United States forces operations and activities on agreed facilities and areas shall be conducted with due regard for the protection of the natural environment and human health and safety, with due respect for applicable Afghan laws and regulations, and in accordance with applicable United States laws and regulations and applicable international agreements.
7. United States forces operations and activities on agreed facilities and areas shall be conducted with full respect for Afghan laws and regulations for the protection of sites or artifacts of historic and cultural heritage. United States forces shall notify and consult immediately with appropriate Afghan authorities through the Joint Commission when sites or artifacts of historic and cultural heritage are discovered on an agreed facility or area.

ARTICLE 8

Property Ownership

1. United States forces shall return to Afghanistan any agreed facility or area, or any portion thereof, including buildings, non-relocatable structures, and assemblies connected to the soil, including those constructed, altered, or improved by United States forces, when no longer needed for United States forces' use. The United States, taking into account its obligations under the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction, done at Paris on January 13, 1993, and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on their Destruction done at Washington, London and Moscow on April 10, 1972, agrees that chemical and biological weapons shall not be stored in the territory of Afghanistan.
